

Budapest is quite lovely and Gill's panorama camera is a must for capturing the greatness of the city (go to http://gillbrooks.com).

The following pictures were shot with an Olympus Camedia C-60 Zoom from Costco purchased a few years ago.

Some aptly describe Budapest as being a "bewildering eclectic architectural heritage" which includes Classicist, Romanesque, Neo-Renaissance, Gothic, Art Nouveau and Modern architecture.

It all looks Gothic to me, other than the modern, thanks to the time I spent working at the American Bar Association for the Endowment Division in Hyde Park, Illinois and attending my sister's graduation from University of Chicago. I learn as I go, for example...

St Stephen's Basilica Neo-renaissance

Matthias Church Romanesque 1015, current Gothic although restored in the 17th century in the Baroque style

Modern mixed with Romanesque and is this real or....

...was it built 4 months ago...according to the pincérnô, it was. A wonderful vantage point from the top of Buda w/ great coffee!

So much to learn, so little time but great fun!
